

Support Portal | Registry Services

Knowledgebase > Routines > Change of holder > As a registrar, what do you do if the original registrant reports an incorrect change of holder?

As a registrar, what do you do if the original registrant reports an incorrect change of holder?

Agent - 2025-04-25 - Change of holder

You initiate an investigation of whether an incorrect change of holder has taken place. As a registrar, you are obligated to store all data regarding change of holders so that you can use the documentation for an investigation of whether a incorrect change of holder has taken place. If a registrant reports that a change of holder was improperly conducted, the saved data is checked.

You have the option to make your own assessment as to whether the domain should be restored to the previous holder while the ownership is being investigated between the two parties involved.

Remember that the new Registrant may have acquired the name in good faith and you should not personally decide on a possible reversal of the domain name, but rather urge the previous registrant to file a police report (on suspicion of a crime) or have the matter tried as a dispute in court.